

Implementing Partners

The Mining for Sustainable Development Programme is

- Led by TI Australia, acting as a global Centre of Expertise.
- Put into practice by local TI chapters in coalition with stakeholders in twenty different countries.
- Supported by the TI International Secretariat.

Phase I of the Programme is funded by the BHP Billiton Foundation and the Department of Foreign Affairs and Trade, Australia.

Transparency International Australia

TI Australia is part of a global coalition working to fight corruption and promote integrity and accountability in government.

Mining for Sustainable Development

Starting with the end in mind

A TI Global Thematic Network Initiative hosted by TI Australia

The Problem

But...

Mining offers the opportunity to catalyse broad-based economic development, reduce poverty and assist countries in meeting internationally agreed development goals.

UN General Assembly, Res 66/288, July 2012

The problem needs to be tackled at its roots: the weak transparency and accountability in decision-making about mining approvals.

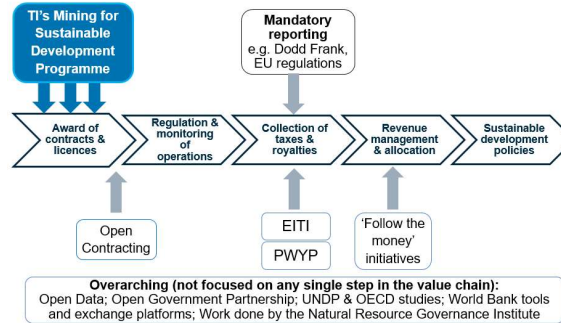

The Solution

Good Governance

-  Greater transparency
-  Increasing accountability
-  Effective regulation

Where our Programme fits in

Our Programme complements existing efforts to improve transparency in extractive industries...

...by focusing on the start of the decision chain: the point at which governments grant mining permits and licences, negotiate contracts and make agreements.

Our Vision

Governments

making decisions about approving mining that promote sustainable development

Civil Society

advocating for people's rights and participating effectively in decisions about mining

Companies

championing transparency and accountability in mining decisions

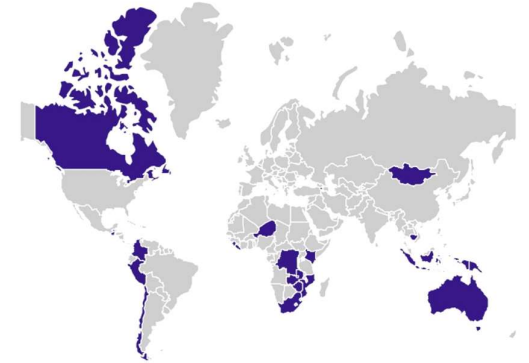

Industry

contributing to a level playing field through better corruption control systems

How the Programme works

Phase I (2016-2017): assessing corruption risks and building stakeholder coalitions in 20 countries.

Phase II (2018-2020): implementing national, regional and global strategies to address risks identified in Phase I.
